Character

In the glass, this harmonious wine has a garnet-red gleam. Aromas of ripe dark berries, cherries and damsons with fine tannins enchant the nose and palate. The powerful fruit are supported on a soft, full-flavoured body, while a long finish completes the enjoyment.

Bioweingut Lenz

Delinat stands for much more than just organic: Myriad small organisms inhabiting a vineyard provide natural protection against pests. In making its wines, Delinat is committed to the sustainable utilisation of resources, while adhering to high social standards. The same holds true for winegrower Roland Lenz. The vineyards of the largest organic wine producer in the German-speaking part of Switzerland are located on the Iselisberg, in the canton of Thurgau. Here the vines thrive in sandy clay soil with a southern exposure. Roland Lenz relies on mould-resistant grape varieties that can ripen fully in the local microclimate. He only presses completely ripe and healthy grapes - both in Thurgau and at his second operation in Chile.
